UNA-UK Annual Conference

I am delighted once again to send my best wishes to everyone attending the UNA-UK Annual Conference.

The work and role of the United Nations continues to dominate international discussion, and the UNA-UK is at the heart of this debate in this country. Your contribution to my Party's policy review, for example, was greatly appreciated.

It is important that all international institutions adapt to change, and the UN – and the Security Council in particular – is no exception. That is why my Party is strongly supportive of the claims of emerging world powers and others to be among the permanent members of the UN Security Council, with expansion to incorporate permanent seats for India, Japan, Germany, Brazil and for an African nation.

I am sure these and wider international issues will be discussed at Exeter this year, and I wish you well for a productive Conference and for the year ahead.
